Welcome to Doheny & Nesbitt

While Doheny & Nesbitt's is today regarded as one of Dublin's best preserved, original Victorian pubs, this premises has a long and distinguished history dating back to 1828. In that year, we find John Heron running a popular and profitable tavern on this site. By 1844 one of Dublin's most enterprising publicans, William Burke, acquired this house. Burke was an astute publican, who ran a busy food and drinks tavern with overnight lodgings upstairs for the many visitors converging on Dublin due to the advent of railway travel.

In 1884 William Burke commissioned the lavish Victorian refurbishment that you see before you today. Preserved, nurtured and cared for through the decades, this Victorian oasis of antiquity is a beacon of delight to all who wish to connect with the heritage of yesteryear.

During the 1960s this premises entered the ownership of two traditional Tipperary publicans, Ned Doheny and Tom Nesbitt, whose name remains above the door to this day. As the years rolled by Ned and Tom were replaced here by the Mangan family. This old Victorian gem then entered a new golden age populated by a diverse clientele of regulars, economists, politicians, and journalists. Indeed, the nation's entire fiscal policy was at one time said to be dominated by 'the Doheny & Nesbitt school of economics.'
